

Ainsley has been actively involved in the day-to-day operations of her family's Warmblood breeding and young horse development program from a very young age. Growing up hands-on in a working farm environment has given her a strong foundation in all aspects of breeding, foaling, handling, and the early education of young horses, as well as an appreciation for correct conformation, movement, and temperament.

Her primary competitive discipline has been eventing, where she has developed a solid understanding of athletic development, rideability, and the importance of thoughtful, long-term training. Recently, Ainsley has expanded her focus to include dressage, recognizing its critical role in producing sound, balanced, and competitive sport horses.

Through her involvement with Warmblood breeding, young horse development, and sport, Ainsley has gained a well-rounded perspective that connects breeding decisions with performance outcomes. She is passionate about learning from international standards and practices and is proud to represent the Canadian Warmblood Horse Breeders Association on the international stage. Her long-term goal is to continue developing as a horsewoman and competitor, with aspirations of representing Canada as a Young Rider in the future.
